OEC
Orthodontic Education Company

June 11, 2007

Dear Dr. [redacted]

A limited number of orthodontic graduate residency positions are available for qualified dentists in a U.S. accredited orthodontic program. These positions are sponsored by a third party, the Orthodontic Education Company (OEC), and are typically allocated to clinically oriented dentists. Although OEC sponsors these positions, the application requirements and acceptance decisions still rest entirely with the orthodontic program. However, by applying for an OEC sponsored position, the chances of acceptance are greatly improved. All OEC positions are available on an equal-opportunity basis.

Many of your sons and daughters aspire to follow in your professional footsteps. I am proud to say that one of my children is an orthodontist. Please give serious consideration to this extraordinary opportunity.

OEC charges a development fee to doctors who are accepted into the sponsored residency positions. The fee is allocated to offset the large costs of developing the residency program and minor program administration costs. In addition, graduates are required to make a small, long-term charitable contribution to a qualified 501(c)(3) designated by OEC, one of the purposes of which is to promote dental education.

The sponsored resident has no obligations to OEC other than the payment of the development fee and the charitable contributions.

All costs incurred for normal participation in the residency program are the sole responsibility of the sponsored doctor. These education costs include tuition and fees and are in addition to the OEC program development fees.

If you are interested in receiving additional information about an OEC sponsored position, please contact Marc Fraga at 904-567-1408 or by e-mail at mfraga@orthoeducation.com. The OEC deadline (different than JU's deadline) to be considered for JU's early acceptance is September 1, 2007.

Best regards,

Gasper Iazzara, D.D.S.
